Finest Programs Is Arranged

PLAN SPEECH CLINIC

Sessions Open November 9;
Enrollment of 500 Teachers
Looked For

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 5.—What is believed to be the finest program ever booked for a Bucks County Teachers' Institute was announced in detail today by J. Harry Hoffman, of Doylestown, Superintendent of Bucks County Schools.

The annual institute will open next Monday morning, Nov. 9, with the enrollment of 500 or more teachers of the public and private schools of the county. The program this year so far as the general sessions in the Court House are concerned, both morning and afternoon, will be of extreme interest to the general public and all those interested in education not only as teachers but as parents and friends as well.

"We want the public at large to attend the meetings in the Court House," Superintendent Hoffman said today. "One glance at the program will convince anyone that real treats are in store for those who attend."

The sectional meetings and conferences will be held throughout the week in the Doylestown public school building. Tuesday will be the Parent-Teacher organization day and Wednesday will be a joint meeting with the teachers and the school directors of Bucks County.

An unusual feature of the institute this year will be the speech clinic to be conducted by Dr. Frank Hips, president of the Byron King School of Oratory, Pittsburgh. The clinic will be held at the public school building starting on Wednesday morning and continuing on Thursday and Friday of institute week. The clinic is open to the public.

The public is most cordially invited to attend.

Scouts in Bristol Are Continuing Actively

The first November meeting of Troop No. 2, Boy Scouts, was held on Monday evening in St. James's parish house, with an attendance of 24.

The patrol leaders turned in interesting reports concerning activities of their patrols during the past week, and a marked improvement in advancement was noted, due chiefly to the splendid efforts of the instructors assigned to each patrol. These boys, Eagle Scouts, George Herman and Robert Wright, Jr., Asst. Scoutmaster William Warner, are to be commended on the methods used and results shown; and Scoutmaster John E. Healey looks upon the work these Scouts are performing as an object deserving of much praise.

Frank Wright, chairman of the troop committee, told the scouts about football in the days when the "foot" counted more than the "ball," and his story was the feature of the evening. All scouts are asked to attend Monday evening prepared to register, as the deadline is set for November 15, when the troop will then apply for a renewal of the troop charter.

On Tuesday evening the regular session of Troop 6, Boy Scouts, was held in the basement of the Methodist Church. Most of the members and two committee members were present. There were short tests on advancement.

All members of Troop 6, who wish to see the Princeton-Lehigh football game, must be at the Methodist Church at 12 noon, Saturday, November 7th.

HOSTESS FOR FIRST SESSION OF COURIER'S COOKING AND HOME-MAKERS' SCHOOL WILL BE MRS. DAVID O. TAYLOR, 507 RADCLIFFE ST.

Well-Known Bristol Woman Will Present Lecturer, Who States That Any Teaching Not Based On Common Sense Will Not Last

The hostess for the first session of the Courier's cooking and home-makers' school, Tuesday evening, November 10th, will be Mrs. David O. Taylor, of 507 Radcliffe street.

Mrs. Taylor, a well known Bristol woman, will introduce the lecturer, demonstrator, Miss Grace Burroughs, to the several hundred women expected to attend this session.

"Tell me what you eat and I'll tell you what you are," said a practical philosopher whose thinking ran ahead of his times. Modern food chemists and dietitians tell us that the old saying is literally true—not in the sense of making us resemble cows or sheep or vegetables as was once believed, but in determining our interests, our abilities, our whole outlook on life. A child whose expected meal has been postponed or who has not been able to digest his food properly, grows tired and irritable, and in this respect "the child is father to the man."

Anyone who can improve the quality, increase the variety and lower the costs of food products, should be listened to with respect—for here lies one of the keys to human progress. If our ancestors had not learned to till the soil and domesticate wild grasses and grains, we would still be wandering through the forests, or migrating across the prairies with our herds of cattle, and living on a diet of meat alone. Changing to a part vegetable diet paved the way to our modern civilization.

All of which is a way of saying that food experts are a necessary and valuable part of today, and cooking schools are not just a fad but rather are as important to man as schools of any of the industrial arts, mechanics or research. When Napoleon remarked that an army traveled on its stomach, he knew what he was talking about. Man has been traveling on his stomach with the steaming depths of the jungle to the supremacy of the earth.

The Courier in bringing to Bristol Miss Grace Burroughs, of the widely known DeBoth Home Makers' Schools, is not providing merely an entertainment for the women of Bristol; or paying the way for them to learn cookery tricks. Miss Burroughs agrees that frills in cookery are as important as the feather in a hat—but no more so. She teaches fundamentals.

After all, most women are cooking principally for the men folks in the family and the growing children, who must find power in the food and who have a vigorous appreciation for food that "sticks to the ribs." Miss Jessie DeBoth recognized that fact long ago and instilled it into her staff.

The student who follows the DeBoth directions, will place before her a meal that is not only attractive in appearance, but will also give most of a nutritious view to its food value. The frills of appearance will be there, too, but only to please the eye and not to hide a deficiency in taste, preparation, or nutritive value.

"Any teaching not based on common sense will not last," Miss Burroughs says. "The modern cookery is based on common sense, strengthened and made efficient by sure and scientific knowledge. We don't ask students to experiment. The experiments have been done in our laboratories. What we offer is known results from exact causes, and we teach the causes."

CUTTER HUMS ACTIVELY WHEN LIFE IS AT STAKE

Joan Lowell, Bucks County
Authoress, Thrills to Ride in Choppy Sea

SCHOONER IS AIDED

Eight days Joan Lowell spent with the Coast Guard, and this is the third of a series of stories and thrills by the romantic authoress who was born aboard ship and who recounted her seafaring girlhood in the story, "Cradle of the Deep." The first woman ever permitted to be a part of the dangerous work performed by the Coast Guard, Joan Lowell received special permission from Washington for the purpose.

By Joan Lowell
BOSTON, Nov. 5.—(INS)—"The Mojave will sail at eleven thirty from Pier 2, Navy Yard," was the message I received Monday morning, October 12, from division headquarters of the United States Coast Guard.

I was prepared to look upon a patrol boat as a small, crowded craft, about 75 feet in length—therefore it was a surprise when I drove up the dock to the cutter Mojave. A great white ship—of two thousand tons, with shining guns, immaculate brass, a crew of 80 men, tugging at her hawsers, restless to be underway.

"In the very beginning of Miss DeBoth's public activities she advanced the theory that had cooking was the direct offspring of the rule of thumb, the guessing of quantities, and of cooking or freezing time, the indifference to the all-important 'little things.' No other creative business could be run on guesswork—no architect or builder would dare guess at the length or shape of a part of his structure. Cookery comes as near to being creative as anything humanly can do. Let's make it a science and an art instead of a haphazard duty," she said. Let's know why we do things, how to do things, and what results will follow." She didn't cook things 'about so many minutes' or have an oven 'fairly hot.' She discarded the 'pinch of this,' the 'some of that' recipe. She knew exactly how much of everything, exactly how many minutes to cook, exactly what oven temperature, and presto, the miracle was there. It never fails."

Carrie Weirman Alleges She Tripped Over Wire On Kolbe Property

REAL ESTATE MOVES

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 5.—Alleging that she tripped over a wire erected on the South Clinton street side of his property in order to keep Reading bus passengers from walking on a lot of grass between the curb and pavement, Carrie Weirman, of New Britain, yesterday filed a damage suit seeking $5,000 in the Court of Common Pleas here, against Otto Kolbe, of West State and South Clinton Sts. The defendant, the suit alleges, is the owner of a handsome Dutch colonial residence in the Southeastern corner of the intersection at State, Court and Clinton streets, and has erected a wire about twelve to fifteen inches high to serve as a barrier to keep passengers from walking over the grass to board the Reading Company's busses, which stop in front of the Kolbe home.

Mrs. Weirman, the plaintiff, avers that she hurriedly attempted to board the bus at this place on April 20, and while carrying packages tripped over the wire, and fell and broke her arm.

She also alleges she suffered bruises and the fracture has caused her frequent indisposition.

J. T. SCHRAMM, 58, HANGS HIMSELF AT PHILA. RESIDENCE

Was Overcome With Carbon-monoxide Fumes at Croydon, October 21st

SAID TO BE ILL

Well Known in Croydon;
Was Frequently at His Workshop There

Joseph T. Schramm, 58, of 1901 E. Birch street, Philadelphia, who is well known in Croydon where he has frequently made trips to his workshop, was found dead, hanging from a nail in the cellar of his home yesterday.

Schramm was found overcome with fumes of carbon monoxide gas in his Croydon garage on October 21st. Rushed to the Harriman Hospital by a neighbor who found him, Schramm was discharged the following day.

The body was found yesterday morning in the basement of the Schramm home, in Philadelphia, following an investigation by Schramm's wife, Mary, and her son, Harold, 18. The lifeless body was suspended by a rope attached to a stout nail which protruded from the cellar wall. The man is believed to have arisen during the night, made his way to the cellar and hanged himself. A light was burning in the basement at the time. Mrs. Schramm told police that about one year ago her husband had been injured in a fall while at work and had been despondent because of persistent ill health since that time.

Schramm, who is survived by his wife, two daughters and two sons, went to Croydon on the 21st of last month. When found in an unconscious condition by Rudolph Nesetto, who lives in the same building, it was presumed that the Philadelphian was overcome by the gas fumes from the automobile as he prepared to take lumber away with him. He had been doing some work in Philadelphia, and two doors were in readiness to place on the machine. The doors and windows of the garage were closed, and Schramm was found on the second floor of the structure. Nesetto, that portion of the building, owing to the continual running of the automobile motor from noon until five o'clock.

Funeral service will be held on Saturday at 1:30 o'clock from Miligan's Funeral Parlor, 11th and Lehigh avenues, Philadelphia.

THE GOVERNMENT'S PROBLEM

Perhaps the best answer to those who think the Federal Government should throw billions into an unemployment and business relief program is why treasury department balance sheet these dark days. The latest of Mr. Mellon's blues songs shows governmental expenditures to be double the receipts and a probable deficit for the year of $2,000,000,000.

Here is a hard nut for the advocates of Federal relief to crack. If they can answer the treasury department's problems, they can have the surplus for the unemployed.

Not since the war days has there been so serious a difference between income and outgo as is anticipated this year. Three budgets in succession have been balanced in red ink. Income-tax receipts alone fell off $550,000,000 in the last fiscal year and are expected to drop another $800,000,000 during the current year.

Ordinarily even such large deficits would not be hard for the American people to make up, but the economic condition of the country is such now that the majority of the people could not support additional tax burdens. It is not a difficult matter to levy new taxes, but it is next to impossible to collect them. There is a fundamental principle of equal taxation for all but as the depression continues the burden is falling upon a diminishing number fortunate enough to be able to meet their tax bills.

PUNISHMENT

To spank or not to spank, that is the question which frets the souls of the reformers and the social workers. Discourses, debates, studies, surveys and questionnaires without number there have been on the subject without producing an answer that will convince the universe.

To the eternal discussion a child welfare worker contributed this thought: "I got spanked when young and thus learned the lesson of an orderly world, a world of cause and effect. I had to adapt myself to the world, rather than expect the world to adapt itself to me."

It was a woman who answered this with the retort that "a great many times when we spank children the process ought to be reversed. I invariably say to myself that the spanking is a confession of the fact that we have not found a better way."

But this leaves unanswered the question whether it is the child or the parent who should be spanked. Glancing around at the younger and older generations of today, we should say that it might do both a little good.

We have no serious objection to platinum blonds, as such.

What has become of new theories by scientists since Einstein's latest three days ago?

Certain theatrical ladies who admit in ads that "I am 39 years old" might as well admit the rest of it.

Theme songs appear to have died that kind of a death, with the exception of an occasional one in that kind of a radio ad.

READ THIS FIRST

Katharine Faring, granddaughter of a Russian prince, is the rightful owner of the missing Czarina rubies of sinister fame and fabulous value. Trying to recover them for her, Paul Federoff is murdered at Monksilver, a vacant country house, and Frank Severn is kidnapped and carried there unconscious. His servant, Creyke, is murdered.

Jim Wynter, friend of Severn and of Katharine, tries to rescue Severn, is injured and drugged and awakens in the home of mysterious Dr. Martell. Recovering, he takes Katharine and his friends, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Grayson, to Severn's country home, Beggar's Court. There a search reveals a concealed stairway and a locked door in the ruins of an ancient chapel. The stub of one of Dr. Martell's cigarettes lies on the stairs.

Sant, Severn's lawyer, reluctantly agrees that the door be forced and goes to engage a blacksmith. Wynter and Grayson encounter in a nearby village a man Grayson recognizes as a former Sing Sing convict. Returning to Beggar's Court they find a wall of the ruin collapsed and the secret stairway buried. A little later Wynter sees Dr. Martell's profile in shadow on a wall near Beggar's Court. Later, Wynter phones Martell, saying he is Martin of Beggar's Court. Martell asks him if the coast is clear.

CHAPTER XXXIV

Martell, the kindly Good Samaritan of two nights ago—deep in this sinister mystery of the man who had vanished! What else could it mean?

One thing it meant, as an instinct like a certainty told Jim: That it had not been just a mere accident of chance that had brought him to Dr. Martell's house after he had been driven away drugged and unconscious from Monksilver. Martell's account of his coming had sounded plausible enough to have disarmed any suspicion—and really it could only have been all part of a cunning ruse.

REVELATION

Those men he had disturbed at Monksilver had not wanted him out of their clutches until they had satisfied themselves that he had seen nothing there, could tell nothing that would be dangerous to them.

He remembered now with a new significance how closely Martell had questioned him: How was it he had seemed to stumble on that crime at Monksilver? Surely he must have seen someone there, or at least have some clue to the identity of these men? Questions that had sounded natural enough then, as it prompted merely by friendly interest, but Jim Wynter knew now how anxiously Martell must have waited for his answer to those questions.

Had Martell been one of the men actually in Monksilver that night?

And the whistling man of the Cross Keys—had he been none other than his unseen assailant in that dark house? Would that be so improbable a coincidence after all?

He went back to the house agents, where Bill had just signed the agreement to take Manorways. Milly came out, looking as happy as a child who has been given a new toy. "And now that's settled," we'll drive back to town to dinner to celebrate the occasion," she cried.

Jim had drawn his friend aside. "Bill," he said, "I'm not motoring to London with you. I'm going back to Beggar's Court tonight."

Bill stared at him in surprise. He saw the suppressed excitement in the other's face.

"What's the great idea?" he demanded.

Briefly Jim told him of that telephone conversation with the Cross Keys Inn and the startling deduction everything seemed suddenly to point to.

PLANS

"Martell's deep in this—Martell's the key to all the mystery about Frank Severn. We guessed it had all been engineered from Beggar's Court—and this is only further proof. Bill, I have a plan for finding out more tonight."

And in a brief whisper he outlined his plan. Bill nodded.

"Good enough. Only I'm not going to let you go back there alone, old man—Lord knows what trouble you'd run your head into without me there to look after you! Besides, I don't want to be left out of any fun going!"

Jim had infected him with his own eagerness. A sudden, almost boyish excitement showed in the clear-cut, clever face. His trained legal mind was in its element in the task of endeavoring to unravel this tangled skein—and the fact that the missing man was one of Jim's oldest friends made Bill Grayson keener still to put his energies and skill at Jim's service.

"But it's not much after 6 yet," he added; "much too early for operations yet. Half past 8 or 9 would be soon enough for this scheme of yours, eh?" And Jim nodded agreement. "That's a bet, then. We'll make it 9 o'clock tonight at Beggar's Court—and here's wishing you good hunting!"

With nearly three hours to kill yet, they got into the car and resumed their journey. Then stopped at Penholt, some thirty miles further on the road to London, to dine at one of the hotels there. After dinner Bill Grayson and Jim proposed to motor back to Beggar's Court.

There was a quick railway service to town from Penholt and Milly and Katharine had assented cheerfully to the suggestion that they should go back by train to Liverpool street, where the Grayson's chauffeur would be instructed by wire to meet them.

"Sorry, but you see something unexpected's happened that makes it rather urgent Jim and I should go back to Beggar's Court tonight," Bill had explained vaguely. "Jim was on the telephone just now at Trayne, and—well, I won't go into details now."

Milly's face fell. To have her curiosity piqued—and to be kept in the dark!

"Oh, but, Bill—," she began protestingly. "Matters of state for the moment, Milly old thing!" he said. "But sit up for our return—and you, too, Miss Faring—and we may have some news for you."

IMPETUOUS

At dinner she talked eagerly about Manorways, and her plans for going there the day after tomorrow at latest—if not tomorrow. Milly always did everything in a hurry.

"You can be ready by then, Katharine? The house is all ready for occupation, so why not?" Milly said. "When Mr. Sant tried to throw cold water on it, he didn't know what a good time we're going to have down there!"

"You aren't afraid of being bored stiff, Katharine?" asked Jim, remembering Sant's words.

She laughed back. "If you'd seen how greedily I snatched at Milly's invitation you wouldn't have to ask! I'm looking forward to it immensely."

Milly glanced across at Jim and knew from his face as his eyes met Katharine's what his thoughts on the subject were.

"Oh, we'll have a good time all right—in spite of Sant's cold water!" he said very contentedly.

Quer, Jim was thinking, how he had come back to England just when he did, not only to be swept almost immediately into this dark labyrinth of mystery affecting his friend, but all unexpectedly to find Katharine again—and Katharine free.

"One thing's fairly certain. Martell will be thinking hard, wondering who it was masquerading as Martin on the 'phone—and it won't be altogether surprising if he makes a near guess," remarked Bill Grayson, as they drove back that night from Penholt to Beggar's Court. "Jim, it might be just as well to keep one's weather eye open. Because, unless we're unduly flattering him by this suspicion of yours he can be pretty dangerous."

"Yes—and that's putting it mildly," And Jim laughed a little grimly. "Well, perhaps we can be pretty dangerous too!"

DARKNESS

It was a dark night. There was no moon, only a dim misty starlight that should be all in favor of that plan that was taking them back secretly to Beggar's Court.

It still wanted a few minutes to 9 when Jim Wynter, avoiding the main gates of the lonely house, made his way very quietly through the little used gate that led from a side road into the grounds.

He was alone. Bill Grayson had dropped in at the Cross Keys, ostensibly for a drink, on the chance of picking up some information about the man whom Jim had seen at that upper window—who he was and if he were connected with the inn. As a stranger Bill could show himself there, where Jim Wynter would have been recognized. Bill was to follow in the car to the side gate, when two hoots of his horn would signal his arrival. Until he came the plan they had in view must wait.

No dog barked as Jim made his way very cautiously across the grounds at the back of the rambling old house, strolling off in the direction of the ruins. The watchdog, poisoned on the night Frank Severn had been overpowered in his own house, had not yet been replaced.

Half way across the grounds Jim Wynter's steps were arrested abruptly. No sound had broken the dead quiet of the night. He could not have said what made him glance round quickly with that sudden odd feeling, like some sixth sense whispering a warning in his brain, that he was being watched by unseen eyes. He stopped dead, staring into the darkness, all his nerves suddenly taut.

Was that a blur of shadow moving stealthily in the dark ambush of the ruins? Or was it just a trick of the starlight in that dim, ghostly place? He took a quick suspicious step nearer, watching and listening intently, still with that odd insistent unaccountable feeling.

No sound, except that somewhere in the darkness an owl hooted—and Jim laughed at himself or the start into which it betrayed him. He told himself with sudden impatience that he was merely imagining things as he turned and walked on.

And almost in the same moment his eyes were arrested by something that was not mere imagination. A gleam had flashed through the darkness, that almost as his eyes caught it was gone again. A light that had come from the direction of the estuary to which these grounds sloped—and, unless Jim Wynter was very far out of his reckoning, from the boathouse there.

What was the meaning of that light? Too many queer things had happened and were happening at Beggar's Court for Jim to have any scruples in the matter. He reflected with a little smile that not even the velvet-footed Martin could have exercised more cat-like stealth as very softly he stole across the intervening twenty yards to find the answer to that question.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Remotest a substitute. 25c at all stores. © 1931 C. M. Co.

NOW A SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENT—

A GASOLINE WITH

CLIMATIC-CONTROL*

HERE is a gasoline with Climatic-Control!

It's Mobilgas! Any gasoline is extremely sensitive to "engine heat" variations, caused by changes in weather, seasons and altitude. So Mobilgas again steps ahead with Climatic-Control, by which it automatically adapts itself to changing driving conditions. • Hot or cold, day or night, wet or dry . . . from a quick start on a cold morning to a steady pull under blazing sun . . . from a dash through beating storm to a climb from sea level to mountain pass. Wherever and whenever you drive, Mobilgas now gives you the highest usable level of performance, because of this scientific achievement. • And all without increase in price! Fill up today. Let your car decide.

VACUUM OIL COMPANY, INC.

*CLIMATIC-CONTROL is the pre-adjustment of the specifications of Mobilgas so that it automatically adapts itself to the variations in "engine heat," caused by changes in temperature, altitude, humidity and road "pull." In the Mobilgas Research Laboratories, all these changing climatic conditions have been "manufactured" in hot and cold testing-chambers. There engine tests are conducted day after day. Thus the road performance of Mobilgas is scientifically verified at different "engine heats," and its specifications pre-adjusted before it is sold in your locality.

(AT LEFT) Drawn from actual photograph made at Mobilgas Research Laboratories, Paulsboro, N. J.—This is the Control Room. Here the most delicate instruments measure and record the exact performance of Mobilgas under different "engine heats," produced by hot and cold room tests. Thus the specifications of Mobilgas are pre-adjusted to provide Climatic-Control, a scientific achievement.

BRISTOL A. A. LOSES TO YARDLEY, 6 TO 0

(By John Barrett)

On Sunday the Bristol A. A. eleven met their first defeat of the year when they played Yardley at Yardley's home grounds. Few words can be said about the game except these—if there is such a thing as showing sportsmanlike conduct to a visiting team, this game should go down as an exact contradiction of it.

Expecting to meet a fair, hard-playing outfit the A. A. went to Yardley as a favor to them, but at every turn in the game met foul play. Walker of Swarthmore refereed the game and he evidently had an off day as can be seen from a few of the plays he called. Standing in the center of the field twenty yards away from the action of the play, he called Dougherty back after he had run for a touchdown and ruled that Dougherty had stepped out of bounds, but he could not show the exact spot as there was no mark. Incidentally all the other officials in the game said Dougherty was at all times within bounds.

Again in the later part of the game, Walker set a new standard of rules for the books of this year. There was a forward pass play in which the Bristol end who was receiving the pass was knocked out of the play, thus giving Bristol the ball where the interference was given to the receiver. This would have been on Yardley's three yard line, but Walker, by a brilliant piece of master workmanship, and true football knowledge, instead of either inflicting or not inflicting the penalty, cleverly conceived this idea and thus again came to Yardley's rescue. He split the distance between the passer and the receiver and said that that was the only way he saw out of it.

The game itself was hard fought and several of the Bristol boys distinguished themselves by their good clean playing. Court at end position along with David, Dougherty and Hutchinson starred for Bristol. Hirsch returning to the line-up for the first time this season, showed fine form.

A return game will be scheduled in the near future if Yardley is willing to play and competent officials are guaranteed as has always been the case on the A. A.'s home grounds.

Cutter Hums Actively When Life Is At Stake

A few minutes the Mojave was backing out of the dock—I was on the bridge, and I dusted off my "Yes, sir," to use for the rest of the cruise.

"Alexander Hamilton would turn over in his grave at two hundred revolutions a minute if he could see a girl on a coast guard," observed one of the men.

A choppy sea was running, and the cutter was rolling in a rhythm which set my pulses tingling with the thrill of riding the deep sea once more.

"You should have been on board when we went half way to Ireland to tow the disabled steamer Effingham to Halifax."

I found a warm affection glowing within me for the Mojave then, for the Effingham was the last command of my father before he forced him to retire. It was the Effingham that took him on his first voyage without me.

By dark we were in the rummy-infested zone . . . one of the patrols radioed they were on the trail of one—another reported her position . . . We were ploughing through the sea, a white, swift cutter, lost in the picture of seething white foam whipped up by the wind.

Then came a call of distress from a disabled schooner, a four-master, leaking and drifting in the heavy seas—a half hundred miles away off Highland Lighthouse. The ship fairly hummed with activity—the engines throbbed a greater speed, the radio sent messages, "Coast Guard on Way."

From the hold aft, an eight-inch hawser was broken out—the shoulder line firing run set in readiness, word radioed to the patrol boat Faunce to steam to the scene of the wreck to help, too, the powerful searchlights turned on the sea, scanning the waters for the schooner—flashing a signal that help was coming.

By midnight, the wind had gained enough force to whip the ocean into a cauldron of whitecaps and breakers—a cold penetrating wind that nearly froze my eyes closed.

On the bridge the captain and navigator were on the watch. They took a compass bearing of a light far inshore to correct our position . . . The schooner Harry G. Deering had drifted about ten miles from her reported position—About 12 o'clock the light of the freighter Munelista showed on the horizon, and to her port side we saw a faint flicker of light—the oil lamp of the schooner . . .

Aft, the watch on duty were standing by alertly; others whose watch was below joined them—a common interest in saving lives—not just as duty—but as a privilege.

I shall never forget the sight of that schooner in the fire of the searchlight—her masts bare of sails, her jib boom smashed and dragging with its ripped jib-sails in the water.

High on a sea she'd rise, and then wallow down in a swell—as if tired of her burden. On her decks were oil-skinned and sea-booted men, and her white-haired aged captain . . . The crew were looking toward us, into the blinding searchlight, and on their faces a look of relief and thanksgiving.

It is no mean feat to haul alongside a drifting schooner in a running sea without colliding—but the captain of the Mojave accomplished it with as much ease as the landlubber parks his car at a curb . . . Words seem inadequate in the face of impending tragedy—across the water the voice of Capt. Parker called:

"Can you handle your ship until daylight? Do you want help on board from our men? . . . and the answering voice of Capt. John C. Sweeney . . . tired from his 29-hour vigil . . . "Yes."

A shot pierced the wind . . . a white line nested in the ratlines of the schooner's mainmast—a messenger line—a lead line, and then the eight-inch hawser, made fast to the capstan on the fore'shead of the Deering . . . and before two bells struck on the pilot house clock, the Good Samaritan of the Sea was heading for Boston harbor with her tow. On the cutter, a routine report made of a vessel being assisted—on the schooner 12 men who faced death, saved—and in my heart an inarticulate admiration for a service which methodically rescues "casuals of the sea," and which does not want gratitude or applause for their job.

Thus, my first day on the cruise had been a full one. I turned in but couldn't sleep . . . I had anticipated seeing smugglers and saw lives saved . . . At daybreak I was going in the lifeboat with the boarding party . . .

"Nerves Broke Down; Was Shaky, Jumpy; Couldn't Sleep"

"Now Like New. Sleep Fine"

"I suffered for years from nerves," writes Miss Helen White, "and I finally had a complete breakdown. Was terribly shaky and jumpy and unable to sleep. Then Vreem gave me the first night's rest that I had had in a year and I soon became entirely well."

Many women who have suffered with nervousness, heart palpitations, irritability and the "blues" for years, and who had taken all sorts of remedies in vain, say Vreem gave them relief at last. Many say first dose calmed their nerves. By taking Vreem regularly for a while, nerve attacks never returned.

Vreem was developed during the War to calm and improve the nerves of shell-shocked and nerve-wrecked soldiers. So wonderfully did it work that it is now being made available to nervous people everywhere.

Contains no dangerous drugs, and is therefore safe for everybody.

End nerves. Sleep sound every night. Get Vreem today. Money refunded if you are not positively delighted with it. At Hoffman's Cut Rate Store.—(Adv.)
